In April, as it is CapitaLand's internal audit month, I have been actively supporting internal audit activities over the past two weeks. This mainly focuses on enhancing data integrity and security measures, maintaining detailed requirements for changes to dashboards across different teams in various countries, ensuring data security tables are up-to-date, and organizing various permissions.

Additionally, I've focused on decommissioning dashboards for projects that were on hold. This strategic initiative is critical to streamlining the entire internal audit process, ensuring that resources are allocated efficiently and focused on key audit objectives. Given that our Data and AI team is responsible for all Power BI dashboards creation, updates, and maintenance for CapitaLand, including its branches like Ascott and Capitaland Investment, this month's key project revolves around internal audit activities. I've primarily assisted my manager in managing SQL details, accommodating the needs of the internal audit team by promptly retrieving necessary data from the Data Security table using SQL queries.

Furthermore, due to the recent training of new members from Malaysia within the company over the past two weeks, who required access to certain dashboards, we promptly updated the Data Security table and managed permissions for the boards to facilitate the smooth progress of the Malaysian team's training.
